RENOUNCES SOCIETY AND THEN TURNS PALACE INTO A CONVENT.

Springfield, Mo., Nov. 18 .- Having decided that her life was a disappointment. Mrs. Alice O'Day, wealthy widne of a former President of Frisco railway system, has turned her elegant country mansion into a convent and proposes to spend the remainder of her life as a guest of the twenty-four black robed nuns who now own the $250,000 estate.

Mrs O Hay who has twice been married, says that no man shall ever enter her life again. She says she you outfit right is eye I, taking a honey expects to find peace of mind in the sedemic round at religious duties in which she takes part to some extent. Having divorced, she cannot become a nun, but is allowed to reside with them as the foundress of a colony. Her gift is indeed a princely one.

Mrs O Day was Mrs Alice Wilhams of St. Louis, when she mar ried the railroad magnate. Six years ago she had a violent quarrel with him, following which she seenred a divorce and a heavy alimony settlement. He has been dead for four or five years. She began to give up society along that time and became interested in religious matters. Although long an Episcopalian, she became a convert to the Roman Cathohe church, and the large gift to that church followed.

All these tunnels are actually under way. Two are completed, four more are nearly complete, and four nearly half bored.

Then the tunnels are to come in the near future-forty-five odd miles of them under Manhattan and Brooklyn, giving speedy access to every part of these boroughs and the Borough of the Bronx, just to the north of Manhattan Island and forming the only part of the greater city which is on mainland.

These, like the subway, will be built under municipal direction, and after a term of years will revert unconditionally, equipment and all, to the city. Plans for them are now ready, and before many months it is expected that the work of building the first of these interborough tunnels, which will probably be operated in conjunction with the subway, will be well under way.

Within the next ten years the tunnels under the island of Manhattan will form a veritable gridiron of electric train passage ways. And there will be at least ample, at Thirty-fourth street and rapid transit crosstown tunnels are being planned to be bored many feet be- a quarter of a century ago. neath the subway and the projected tunnels that will have the same general direction, that is, run lengthwise of the island.

A quarter of a billion dollars is the enormous sum that the city expects to spend in consummating its share of the wonder of transportation. This includes the fifty million dollars spent for the subway and the thirty millions for the East river and Brooklyn extensions. Be- improvements done first. Each railroad nels and in building the two skyscraper the edge of the financial district, the other in the Thirty-third street shopping

Twenty million dollars has already been spent by the railroad in question. Forty millions more is expected to see the improvement through to the last detail. In these millions is included the cost of the great terminal station to be built in the heart of the city. It will be one of the largest terminals in the world; for its site thirty city blocks were cleared of the hotels, retail stores, manufactories, flats, apartment houses, private houses. Thousands of persons were forced to find homes and places of business elsewhere in the city. The trolley tunnels under the East river will call for fifteen millions.

But this is not all of the wonder of transportation.

In order to bring its terminal facilities not only up to date, but, if possible, put them years ahead of the city, the railroad that now enjoys a monopoly of direct entrance into Manhattan is busy spending tifty millions on a mammoth station and for electrification of its lines within a fifty miles radius of the metropolis.

The concourse of this station will be the largest business room in the world. Its dimensions will be seven times those of the present lobby; it will be 470 feet long, 160 feet in width, and 150 feet from floor to peak of the great domed roof. Restaurant and toilet accommodations are to be increased five hundred fold, the ticket lobby seven fold, the cab stand capacity twelve fold. There will be two track levels, one for expresses, the other for suburban traffic, and hence two waiting-rooms, one above the other. The suburban level will be the lower.

Of course the new station yard will be two-decked. There will be sixty-five acres of tracks on the two levels, as against twenty-three acres in the present two layers of tunnels in places. For ex- yards. Everything is being done on a scale that would have astounded the Fourth avenue, the railroad tunnels will kings of transportation no more than a run below the subway, and some of the decade ago, to say nothing of the chaps who thought they were doing big things

Copper is a Permanent Investment

No man can tell how long a good Copper mine will last, because no man has ever seen one exhaust 1. The Rio Tinto mines in Spain have been worked for over two thousand years, and last year they were the third largest producer in the world. The Mansh 11 mines in Germany have been worked for seven hundred years, and last year they were the lixth lark t producer. Copper was discovered in this country in 1845, and in the Lake Superior district the levels are a mile below the lake, yet last year they produce I more copper than ever before in their history. The fimous Abaconda mine is steadily increasing its production The United Verde in Arizona is turning out more and more Copper every year. No real Copper mine in Copper is a Profitable Investment

WHY WE SELL STOCK

We have a great property, but we need noney to develop it. It a farmer owned money to develop it. If a farmer owned quarter acction of land and had only a spid to cultivate it with, it would take years of toit for him to get money enough to buy proper machinery to work it to advantage. So it is with a mine. It we went to a capistlist he would demand the lion's share; but we believe that the American people will be gla to come in with us and help us to mak this property the greatest Copper mine the continent. So we go to YOU, relying your judgment and sound common sense, ask YOU to join with us, man to man, w ask YOU to join with wa, man to man, and share alike, in this great enter With YOUR aid, we shu'l nake a United Verde of this property. CHAPTER XIII. On a bright, bracing afternoon in October Verom a was walking backward and forward upon the grass. Unwilling to leave her mether in her present con dition for even an hour, and sensitively shrinking from the observation she imagined herself likely to attract out of doors, she had, since the night of the tragedy, refused to venture beyond the precincts of the house. It was in the garden she, therefore, took the exercise her mother considered necessary to her girl's health, and it frequently hap pened that on such occasions she was not alone, for from the back windows of the neighboring house it was possible for Quinto Quave to catch sight of her black-rebed figure moving over the grass or under the trees, and to joln her was no difficult task for one who for years had enjoyed the uncercmonious entree to her mother's house

On this occasion he was walking beside her, a cricket cap on the back of his head, his hands thrust into the pockets of his tweed jacket, brown shoes upon his feet.

"I wanted mother to come out here in the fresh, bracing air, but she thought it too cold," Veronica was saying "I don't know what we should do if we hadn't this dear, old quiet garden." "I think it the julliest garden in the world. Ours is nothing to compare to this," Quinton replied, looking into her pale face, long, like her mother's, and with something of the same wisiful expression in her , say eyes. "Why?" she as ed

hig, linen collars, and on Sundays a tail hat that need to make me laugh when saw your mg to church' "And you had dolls and a skipping

"You used to skip, too," she sail, laughing at the conical picture he presented to her mind's eye, he joining in her laughter.

Do you remember the day I fell from that tree when I was getting the apples from the top bough?" Quinton

'And I burst out crying because I thought you were killed." "You I ked me then," he said shyly

"You must remember I was only a mere child," she answered, smilingly "Rut you are not a mere child now, Veronica, and and-"Don't-don't," she said, in a low, agi tated wnice.

"Then I used to dream of doing the most daring things in the world for your nake. I used to wish you were drowning, that I might save you, or that you were being run away with by wild horse that I might rush out an I clutch at his bridle with a wrist of steel, or that your house was burning, that I might climb into a window and carry you out fainting in my arms."

That was because you read boy penny-dreadful storles," she replied, her eyes looking away from his and you were the first to tell the in-spector," she said, shudderingly.

"You don't know how proud, how happy it would make me if I could help in tracking the scoundrel."

"I think I do," she remarked, timidly "Verenica," he began, in an impressive tone, "do you ever think of me?" "I see you so often, how can I help thinking of you?" she replied, with feminine evasiveness. 'But you know what I mean," he said, his dark eyes fixed on her with an earnestness, felt rather than perceived. "Do you think of me when you don't see me?"

'Sometimes." "And-and-" the lad continued, the motion he felt almost choking him, "tio you care for me?" You ask to many questions." "What matter? Answer this one and I'll ask no more at present." "Yes," she replied, touched by his earnestness, "I care for you very mucli."

"You do!" he eried out, as if this admission caused him the greatest surprise, for by that strange contradiction which governs all true lovers he would depreclate himself in his own eyes in proportion to the force with which he loved her. You really ear for me.

"Don't say any more, Quinton," she pleaded, a happy confusion visible in her

"Only this; finat no matter what happens, I shall love you all the same' 'Always, 'ne same," she said, dreamily "Alway". And when the time comes that I den support myself, then-"Look" she exclaimed, interrupting him; "I re is mother." Quint n, raising his eyes, saw Olive Dumbarton standing on the balcony intside the drawing-room window, to but a feasible surmise became the inspector's outy, and his first step in this direction was his endeavor to discover Merza. In this the l'arisian police were unable to afford Mackworth any help. If the scoundrel had returned to Paris he had not gone back to his old quarters, had not given his own name at the house where he stayed, and had not and ask for him at the house, but Mezza been seen in his former haunts. The inspector's fear was that the man had made his way quietly and unohservedly to Italy or Sicily, where, hiding among in my letter for the money he owe me the people of some unknown hamlet in he make no answer, and he did not the mountains, he might spend the remainder of his days in perfect security.

This supposition did not prevent Mackworth from using all his energies in his search for Mezza, and already the police all over the continent were looking for the man, whose personal lescription had been forwarded to themwhile at the same time inquiries were being made regarding him by the London police.

It happened, one bracing, blustery Octoher morning that Mackworth, having ust left his house with the intention of eeing what results had attended these nvestigations, noticed a man's figure advancing up the street and pausing now and then to examine the numbers of the houses he passed. In this figure Mackworth almost immediately recognized Pietro, the collar of whose overcoat was turned up around his neck, a woolen muffler covering his mouth, a wide-brimmed soft hat shadowing his

The news Mackworth received from the Parisian police that Marco Mezza had returned to the French capital at the end of July, and had quitted it again on the day succeeding that on which David Dumbarton had departed for England, came as a surprise to the in spector. For, in the first place, it proved that Pictro's statement regarding Mezza's movements was true, and, in the second, it formed an unexpected link in the association of this man with the tragedy of the Hexton road.

No longer did the slightest doubt remain in Mackworth's mind regarding the perpetrator of this crime, for which an innocent woman yet stood accused Mezza had taken his revenge and fulfilled his threat at the risk of his own

"What else?" inquired the inspector, whose expectations were thuroughly roused.

"He say nothing more. Lorenzo, he thought him drunk, for Mezza would say little; he did not wish to tall; and Lorenzo let him go."

"But," Mackworth asked anxiously, "didn't he asked Mezza where he was staying? "No: but Lorenzo saw him leave a Mackworth made a hasty note of the address.

"He was staying there?" "Lorenzo did not know," replied Pietro, shrugging his shor'd rs.

A quarter of an hour later and Mackvorth had found the shop in the King's Cross road, entering which, he asked for Lorenzo Bartolini, when a low-sized, thick-set man in his shirtsleeves, and with his face, hands and head all covered with white powder, came from the workshop at the back to see him.

Lorenzo, whose black, round eyes assumed a startled expression when his visitor's calling was made known to him, appeared willing to give whatever information he could; but that was little in itself, and conveyed nothing more than what Pietro had already stated This man had never known Mezza intimately, but had seen him a few times when he had stayed with Pietro in lammersmith, and had fallen into that friendly intercourse which foreigners in a strange land quickly form. He had, therefore, been surprised when Marco would have passed him without speak ing, and, thinking it was accidental. Lorenzo had stopped him.

But that Mezza had wished to hold no conversation with his acquaintance soon ing'y went his way without learning much of the man he had encountered The chief impression Lorenzo carried away from this meeting was that Mezza was druck.

"You are sure of that," said Mack
